It's not just for breakfast anymore...

Domestic Marijuana is the key to our future.

Most people don't realize how much domestic marijuana has to offer. It may be the key to our future in more ways than you could ever have imagined. Welcome to the Domestic Marijuana Times, issue one, volume one. This series will show you all the breathtaking benefits of legalizing domestic marijuana, and what it has to offer each and every one of us.

Put aside your notions of pot as an evil drug for a moment, and imagine it were a new plant species, recently discovered deep in some rainforest. It would soon be declared the modern miracle plant by scientists, for dozens of reasons.

This issue will discuss just a few of these reasons, and more will follow in subsequent issues.

As a taste of what's inside, marijuana is the fastest growing plant known to man, it produces four times as much tofu per acre as soybeans, or four times as much paper as trees, and can actually reverse global warming, provide fuel for your car, clothing, shelter, electricity, and a whole lot more - with a little help from us, of course.

Current law makes research and development illegal—the government went as far as making universities destroy the results of their old research in the early 1970's in an attempt to eradicate pot.

There is little distinction between the user and a dealer – terms like 'furnishing' and 'trafficking' no longer mean 'providing' and 'selling' as the lawmakers intended. Somewhere along the line, simply smoking pot at home with a few friends is a class A felony on a federal level, and they can take your car, house, kids, and money in many cases.

If the same laws applied to alcohol, you would be guilty of furnishing alcohol if you split a six-pack up between three people, or poured somebody a glass of your wine. Whoever goes to the store to buy the six pack or bottle of wine is trafficking.

With alcohol such a menace, we need legal domestic pot.

Economy Would Soar from Domestic Pot

Domestic marijuana has the economic might to handle our tough economic times with ease – but current laws and enforcement keep the money flowing out of the country instead – on imported marijuana (which is often laced with other dangerous drugs, or volatile chemicals used to change the smell in an attempt to get them past customs).

By channeling the money people already spend on medical marijuana and marijuana for recreational purposes back into the local economy, we could have new economic wealth we have never dreamed of – but big business and big government don't want that. They make way too much money from keeping it illegal – and that's what we are here to change.

Living in a Bubble: Times of Terror

These days, you just can't be too safe. Domestic Marijuana is the answer to our fears.

Marijuana can be grown in a totally enclosed area, without soil, by using high intensity lights or sunlight.

While you may not be able to grow enough of it to live on, you could grow enough of it to barter in tough times we may face just around the corner. It's also the best producer of oxygen of any plant known to man.

So the next time we get a terror alert, and they tell us to duct tape ourselves into an unventilated room, you can feel safe with a little more oxygen than the next guy by growing pot.

In fact, marijuana can be used as a sole plant, capable of supporting human life in an enclosed area, as long as there is either sunlight or electric light to replicate it, and enough of it.

You would of course need more space than one room – it would be more like a greenhouse to support one family with oxygen, and even more to feed them.

There is no time to plant once the terror alert is sounded, and marijuana is by far the best plant for sustained life in an enclosed area, year round.

Legalizing domestic marijuana makes sense from a survivalist viewpoint in times of terror. It also cuts big funding from a number of our current enemies.

“One acre of domestic marijuana could bring its owner over ten million dollars.”

Hemp to Replace Coal in Power Plants

Coal Consumption to be cut by one third.

Carbon Dioxide net output can be reduced by 40 percent by growing fields of hemp and burning them in power plants as a supplement to coal.

Most existing coal based power generation plants, which currently account for a quarter of Maine's electricity, could accept biomass directly, without modification.

By blending the coal with a biomass such as hemp, nitrous oxides and other harmful pollutants are reduced dramatically, and carbon dioxide is actually removed from the air by growing the hemp first.

With the supply of coal a limited strategic resource, we should conserve it in as many ways as we can. We should look toward renewable sources of energy, and the best one we know of is domestic marijuana.

Reducing pollution and conserving future resources are two more great reasons to legalize it.

Marijuana Better Alternative than Gambling

Gambling has recently been show to cause suicide.

We all know the people who buy the most lottery tickets are the ones who can afford them the least.

Gambling has always had nasty side effects, and it always strikes those in the lowest tax brackets.

Legalizing domestic marijuana can provide much more money than legalized gambling can, and it's safe.

Domestic marijuana helps those on the bottom by allowing them to grow their own and profit from it. It helps the rest of us by generating taxes on this revenue, helping to ease the burden of spending-gone-wild.

One acre of domestic marijuana can bring it's owner over ten million dollars with ease—three times that with experience, if market prices prevail.

The Right of Jury Nullification

There are a lot of things they won't tell you.

If you get selected for jury duty, here's one I'm sure they will forget to mention – Jury Nullification.

It is seated in the oldest of court precedents, and is easily the biggest defense we have against oppression and tyranny – and that's why they won't remind us about it.

If you, as a jury member, feel that the punishment for a particular crime is unjust, you may thereby vote a 'not-guilty' and stand by that vote, stating such as your reason.

Nobody can find you wrong for this, although the meek among you will attempt to coerce a fast, easy, state-friendly answer as if they themselves were on trial as well.

If you find yourself on a jury trial considering a case of domestic marijuana, do the right thing and vote not guilty, no matter what the evidence. It's a bad law, not a bad person, and shouldn't spend several years in jail over a plant.

It has been shown in case after case where jury nullification was used, that the opinion of a juror to vote not guilty cannot be challenged, or called wrong, even when done with the determination that the punishment does not fit the crime. It is the inherent right of jurors.

Paint your Car, Gas it up too?

The marijuana seed has some incredible properties.

You can refine the oils produced by pressing hemp seed into many varieties of compounds very similar to plastics, fuels, and paints.

In fact, you can use hemp seed to produce oil to lubricate your engine, fuel to run the car, paint, vinyl-like material for the seat, (cloth-like materials for seats and body panels can be made from stalks) and much more.

Hemp seed oil is made up of complex carbohydrates, which are chemically similar to hydrocarbons, or oil based products.

Because we already refine oil into thousands of different compounds, we can use current technology to refine hemp seed oil into practically anything that crude oil can be made into, with one key difference – hemp seed oil is renewable and reduces carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, unlike petroleum use.

“The opinion of a juror to vote not guilty cannot be challenged, or called wrong, even when the sole reason is that the punishment does not fit the crime. In fact, this is what it was meant for.”

Medical Marijuana Program to Expand

New treatment for depression, arthritis.

Depression is often treated with drugs, which tend to be addictive, leading to deeper depression.

Domestic marijuana can be used to treat victims of depression, as well as many other psychological disorders, with much greater success than current prescription medications.

People with eating disorders, upset stomach, major aches and pains, arthritis, gout, and many other ailments can turn to domestic marijuana for fast relief, and they can grow it themselves.

Millions of dollars a year can be saved on expensive prescription drugs, and we can save our lives, but we have to legalize it first.. Contact your congressman or senator today, and demand some real answers.

Domestic Marijuana Should Be Legal Now

With dozens of great reasons why, and no legitimate complaints, this is a no-brainer.

Domestic marijuana can solve all of the major problems that we currently face as a society, but not if it gets eradicated first.

Marijuana is one single natural resource that could provide human life with all of it's needs, including shelter, food, fuel, clothing, and much, much more. Man can survive on marijuana alone.

By keeping marijuana illegal, we are sending the money people already spend on marijuana to overseas importers, who poison the marijuana with harsh chemicals or other drugs.

Legalizing marijuana would lead to lower costs for police protection, lower jail costs, lower taxes, lower prescription prices, and much more revenue to tax.

It is the answer to the current problem of hard drug use – the only gateway with marijuana is when the gate is shut, and the supply of marijuana is cut off – people will simply turn to whatever is available. These days, it's heroin, crack and Oxy's. Pot is much safer. By legalizing domestic marijuana we can cut down on deaths by drunk drivers, overdose, and rage. We can reduce the deficit and taxes, while increasing spending. We can save the environment and conserve natural resources for the future, when we are sure to know a little more about what to do with them than we do now.

For the sake of our health, our future, our economy and our sanity, legalize domestic marijuana today. Stop discrimination against pot smokers, who make up over ten percent of the population. It's not right.
